ZAK EBRAHIM

Is not his father. His father is El-Sayyid Nosair, the terrorist who killed the leader of the Jewish Defense League and helped plan the bombing of the World Trade Center in 1993. Despite being subjected to violence and extremist ideologies, Zak did not become fanaticised. Instead, he uses his experience to fight terrorism and bigotry in hope that someone who feels compelled to use violence may realise that there is a better way. He believes that violence is not inherent to anyone. Everyone has a choice. For Zak Ebrahim, peace arrives through advocacy.

MARINA CANTACUZINO

Is an award-winning journalist who in 2003 founded The Forgiveness Project. The Forgiveness Project is a UK-based non-profit organisation to showcase the real stories of victims and perpetrators to explore ideas around forgiveness. She has also spoken at the United Nations before Secretary General Ban Ki-moon about her work and is a contributor to the film documentary Beyond Right and Wrong. Additionally, she teaches about the Trauma Cycle and runs workshops exploring concepts of forgiveness and restorative storytelling.

BERND WOLLSCHLAEGER

Is the son of a highly decorated WWII tank commander and Nazi Officer who was imprisoned after the Allied victory. He struggled growing up in Germany and in his father's shadow. He has authored several books one of them, "A German Life: Against All Odds Change is Possible" where he narrates his struggle. He eventually converted to Judaism and has served in the Israel Defense Forces as a Medical Officer. To Dr. Wollschlaeger, individuals need to take initiative and be proactive in order to create peace.

JOANNA BERRY

Is a peace activist and public speaker. Her father, Hon. Sir Anthony Berry was killed by the IRA during the Brighton Hotel Bombing. She met Patrick Magee, the bomber that caused her father's death and chose reconciliation over hatred and revenge. She has dedicated her life to peace building and mediation of conflict, thus facilitating extensive workshops around the world. For Jo, peace is about reconciliation through restorative practice.

FELIPE QUEIPO

Is a communications officer in the Department of Global Communications in the United Nations, New York. He is responsible for outreach, engagement and global communications with civil society. To Felipe, peace comes through constant activism where individuals from various communities are active in advocating for real change around the world. He believes that many individuals have a unique skill set that is useful in advocating for peace. Moreover, he is able to explain how his department in the United Nations is able to facilitate these individual pursuits.

DEREK SCHWARTZ

Is an ex-US Marine who has had several deployments in Iraq and Afghanistan. The lives that were taken and the lives that he took constantly haunts Derek. Suffering from both traumatic brain injury as well as post-traumatic stress disorder resulted in him constantly drinking and undertaking bad decisions. However, things began to change when he met his wife, Linsey, and is beginning a new life in construction management. Other soldiers are not as lucky, as PTSD continues to torment them. For Derek, peace comes through the acceptance of one's self.

SARAH KABIR

Is the author of 'Voices of Peace' as well as a researcher and humanitarian worker. By writing stories of people whose lives have been torn by war, she hopes that this will allow people to listen and internalise their message. She believes that by reading their stories, people will be able to empathise with the storytellers and learn from their message. These stories are an impactful message that strikes the heart. Sarah is also passionate about peace building and reconciliation and believes that racism and divided policies have no place in Sri Lanka. For Sarah, peace building comes through uniting people's stories.

"Education quite simply, is peace building by another name."

Kofi Annan, 7th Secretary-General of the United Nations
